

Poststructuralist Theories of the Body

AMN-340.113

Tue 12:30-14:00, Rm 439

Instructor: Enikő Bollobás (ebollobas@gmail.com)

Office hrs: Tue 2-3 or by appointment, Office: 312

This is an advanced course surveying some contemporary theories of the body. After the introductory lectures given by the instructor on theories of representation, everyday life, and human spaces, we will read and discuss foundational texts on the following topics: body and soul, body and power; bodies male and female; techniques and languages of the body; bodies in consumer culture; dressing the body: clothing, fashion, dress codes; bodies and size; body and beauty; bodies and identities; the medicalization of the body; technologies of gender and race; “normalcy” and disability; the female object.

REQUIRED READINGS have been collected in a PACKET available for xeroxing. The following books have been used:

1. Mariam Fraser and Monica Greco, eds. The Body—A Reader. London & New York: Routledge, 2005.
2. Janet Price and Margrit Shildrick, eds. Feminist Theory and the Body—A Reader. New York: Routledge, 1999.
3. Susan Rubin Suleiman, ed. The Female Body in Western Culture—Contemporary Perspectives. Cambridge: Harvard UP, 1985.
4. Mary Russo, The Female Grotesque—Risk, Excess and Modernity. New York: Routledge, 1995.

Grades will be based on (i) class participation, (ii) presenting one book + leading that class discussion, and (iii) a book review. An (iv) in-class final test will be given in case reading assignments are not properly done over the semester.

Reading the assigned texts. Students are required to come prepared for class: having read their assignments for the day, they must be able to understand the texts (know the words as well as the main theses and arguments), remember details, and formulate their critical comments. When students do not read the assigned texts, they will be required to hand in the outline, no more than one page for each text, of the assigned readings for the following class.

Active participation, visibility. Be visible. Mere physical presence, even when you have read the assignments, is not enough: you have to prove your skills in reading, analysis, and argument in class discussions.

Presenting one book. Here you are required to give a 15 minute review of a book related to that day’s topic. You should concentrate on the main theses of the book, find its originality and significance. You can use your notes while giving your presentation, but cannot read out complete sentences from them. Be sure to rehearse your presentation at home so that you know how long it is. Remember, your presentation will come at the end of the class, so you will have to stop after 15 minutes no matter what. As to locating the book, I encourage you to check Budapest libraries first. If it is not available anywhere, I will lend you the book for three weeks altogether: two weeks before you give your presentation and one week after (when your review is due).

Leading that class discussion. Leading the class discussion the day when your presentation is due will also be your responsibility. This means that you will have to come extra prepared in the assigned readings of the day, understand them fully (you might have to do some research in order to accomplish that), and be able to explain the problematic parts.

Book review. As a written assignment, you must write up your presentation into a proper book review for the week following your oral presentation. Check scholarly journals about the genre of the book review. Give a summary of the main theses. Try to contextualize the book, show where it fits in, where it is original and where it might be useful.

In-class final test (pending). This test will cover all the readings, discussions, and presentations.
